THE WIKIMEDIA Foundation is the non-profit organization that powers Wikimedia and other collaboratively edited projects. When re-designing their office space, the Wikimedia Foundation paired with Vital Architects to create a space that empowered employees to work together in a dynamic, open environment. To achieve this, the Wikimedia Foundation purchased several Locus Workstations and arranged them in clusters to create hot desking zones so employees could all take advantage of the workstations at different times. This design layout gave the Wikimedia Foundation the open environment that they envisioned and allowed them to save space, as the footprint of the Locus Workstations are about 30% smaller than traditional desks.

"The Focal desk was a great solution for our offices - we had space and comfort issues with our staff, it solved both and I felt better knowing that the upright positioning was better for our staffs' health."
